Lesson Assessment

Students identify, list, and discuss choices and beliefs (values) and relate to possible careers.

Lesson Preparation

Essential Questions: What is important to you?

Engagement (Hook): Using a purse put out things (money, pictures of friends and family, credit cards, etc.) that might be considered valuable. Hold up each item and ask students: What do you value in life?

Procedures

Professional School Counselor Procedures:	Student Involvement:
<ol style="list-style-type: none"> Following “Hook”, discuss the meaning of “values” (see Counselor Sheet) and ask students to write down responses to question: What is important to you? Provide examples of important things: love, health, wealth, education, freedom, security etc. Ask: Why do people feel the way they do? Distribute student activity sheet “What is Important to Me? Guide students as they complete the activity sheet with the partner from Step 1. (Time may or may not permit the introduction/explaining of partner’s choices.) Ask for volunteers to share one item of importance from the activity sheet. Explain how the importance can be career related. For example: If health is important, then a career in nursing or a medical doctor could be explored. If education is important, a teaching career could be explored. Assessment: Ask students to select one item that is compatible with his or her ideals and relate it to an occupation or career. Write the item and the occupation at the bottom of the lists.	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> Students write things that are important to them; turn to a partner and identify one thing of importance. Things of Value

Everything has some sort of value. In our country, we often think of money as a way of measuring worth. Something may be worth fifty cents, one hundred dollars, or one hundred thousand dollars. If we lived in India, the value of something may be determined by cattle.

We also place importance on things because they fill a need. For example, we place a priority on food, clothing, and a roof over our heads. These things are essential. A friend who comes to see us in the hospital is important to us because of the concern shown by that friend.

Many things of value cannot be seen or measured. Honesty is one of those. If you are honest and if you want others around you to be honest, then honesty is something you value. Things of value change as we grow and learn more about ourselves. Most things of value are learned from family, friends, and school. Our things of value are often different from those of our friends. This may cause conflict and you may have to make choices. For example, your friends may ask you to do something that you don't like to do or something that your parents do not approve. You will have to decide if you should be loyal to your friends or do what you feel is right. When things you value conflict with your friends, how do you decide what to do? The following activity will help you identify what is important to you.

What is Important to Me?

Name _____ Date _____

What is most important to you? There is no right or wrong answer. Knowing more about what is important to you will help you know yourself better.

With a partner, read the following lists of words. Be sure that each of you understands each word. Look up the words with which you are unfamiliar. It is not necessary to write the definitions; just understand them.

Select the three important items that you think would make the world a better place. Mark them with an "M" for "me." Then tell your partner why you chose these. Listen very closely as your partner tells you his or her choices. Mark his or her important issues with a "P" for "partner." When you have discussed choices, you will introduce your partner by name to the class and explain your two or three of your partner's choices to the class (time permitting).
